Cypress Delaney

Overview

Overview

When you become a statistic hidden from the public's eye in a medicated cage, truly then do you realize you are mad. Cypress had grown used to the progression and regression of her illness to where it became funny when she shared her stories, along side the art projects she made in the unit. Watching people's uncomfortable reactions and shifting gazes, fearing of the deemed "crazy" person was hilarious. Everything and everyone is so funny. So of course she's happy. Why shouldn't she be?

History

History

"One insecure woman plus a guy who drinks and drinks equals me!"
Cypress Lynn Delaney was born in a tense middle-class household in the town of Thurmont Maryland. There she and her three siblings learned that everyone can be deceiving. Her father was all smiles to the public eye and quite the hot-head at home, especially when whiskey was involved. If her father was a monster, then she would be one too. Scaring her mother and siblings becoming a regular occurrence.
A messy divorce caused Cypress to move in with her grandparents where she grew angrier and angrier. Thus resulted in multiple breakdowns when reaching adulthood causing her to be admitted at the local behavior health unit. One involuntary, and the other three voluntary following advice from her therapist. Each time made her more cynical to where she developed a dark sense of humor to cope.
Everyone is hilarious. People's reactions to her stories and crude psychward art projects making it even funnier. Living off of the uncomfortable eye contact and nervous laughter. After her fourth time in patient she met her soon to be sire, a taxi driver who agreed a little too much with her ideologies. With her newfound freedom she chooses to still prey on those she terrifies. Freedom and blood, what more could a girl want?
