Face Claim
James Tissot (Public Domain)
White robed around him, Malachi wears a tasseled garment, having tzitziyot, and a headcover. Simple sandals at his feet, the Cainite is not a handsome man. Dark of face and darker of beard, easily flushed and humane, he can be mistaken to be a Mortal Priest easily. Two sidelocks, tucked in the robe usually, are to his head. It would not be hard to guess he is Malkavian when standing next to other Cainites.

History

History

Malachi is from a religious jewish family in Jerusalem. Born in 1930 to an orthodox family of 10 children, studying in Yeshiva Malachi was never a staunch believer, but he enjoyed reading and poring over the biblical text and its interpretations. He studied in the Hebrew University, becoming a Bibliologist. He never married as he knew he be under scrutiny by of his community once he is settled down and has a wife and children. His family tolerated it due to his study of the Bible, which is considered a virtue. He was contacted by a person to meet in an ancient cemetery in the valley of Hinnom, who showed interest in certain texts and seemed to have had knowledge of ancient scrolls. Trusting that person, Malachi arrived there late at night. He was ambushed, Embraced and abandoned by his Sire. His Embrace made him a True Believer, firmly believing the words of the Bible he has studied, and finding explanations for his new condition in the mark of Cain. Luckily, the Camarilla took him in, believing him to be a seer of some kind, and presenting his disappearance as an accident that befall his mortal self.

Unliving in Jerusalem for two decades while tending to religious matters and being a guide to Kindred Jews. Sent to the United States to help his kin, he faced accusations of Noddism which prompted him to flee across the USA, not by plane, eventually reaching Baltimore.
