Albert Laurence, a remnant of Sera's past.

Albert once served Sera's family and kept the estate in shape after her main family's disappearance. He turned into a Ghoul to serve even longer and protect her. His first way of doing this in modern times is by making it appear like he is more of a vampire than she is.

History

History

She was born under a total eclipse on the darkest day in Montreal, Canada. One specific Lasombra noticed this and decided it would be interesting to embrace someone born on this day. Years later, Sera's life as a human was going until things just slowly started going downhill constantly. First, it was her pet going missing, her friends have died in various ways. Then any close family she had were slaughtered and she nearly died herself. She didn't understand what she did to deserve such a horrible turn in her life. But she just closed herself off from anyone else and continued on with her life trying to run her family business mostly by herself.

It was on her 25th birthday, December 22 1,957 the one behind everything going wrong embraced Sera since she passed the test of continuing forward even after everything she loved was lost. Sera did not take well to the embrace mentally but she was able to keep that to herself. The monster that turned her could likely just as easily get rid of her. There were very few good memories and many horrific ones. It was a struggle not to let the beast out and keep her humanity. While not drawing attention to herself.

Like any vampire who has been around for a while her hands were stained with blood. The Sabbat's goals just didn't match Sera's wants for her new undead life. A life of her own and not to devolve into a monster. For some reason, she clings to her humanity, it could be cause she could still pass as human for the most part until she stares into a mirror.

In 1,967 an ambush set by the Society of Leopold managed to kill most of Sera's pack she was working with slain she saw this happening and decided to toss some of her belongings into the flaming corpse of a vampire and planned on fleeing Canada. The human part of her made her make one final stop by her estate where she grew up. She wasn't expecting anyone to be there, but the old family butler was still there. Albert always had a keen eye even in his old age he spotted her. She knew she would need a ghoul, but one who could be trusted and he won't let her leave with him. So she took him with her and fled to the United States roaming from coastal city to coastal city keeping a low near nonexistent profile. However ever since she left Canada, a demon has been popping up wherever she goes bothering her. As if the Abyss is chasing her for leaving her clan and trying to get her to do things for it now and then.

She arrived in Baltimore after the Camarilla moved in. She saw something brewing something would happen within a few years to the city possibly. She tapped into some of the wealth she stored up and sold some stock to buy property there. As she thought about the event that happened in 1967. If hunters got even stronger since her encounter with them, she would eventually need to pick a side at some point. The Camarilla might stake her because of her clan. The Saabat might leave her out in the sun or torture her if they find out she has just been avoiding them for years. There is no way the anarchs would consider trusting her. So she waits and plans for her chance to make a change that would benefit her. For the right time to step out of the shadows.
